Mission Media to Host Invisible Wounds of War at Work at CTHRA's HR Symposium on November 2

NAPERVILLE, ILL., October 20, 2016 — Transitioning from the military to a civilian career can be a daunting experience. Fortunately, industry employers can gain proven strategies to facilitate the process at CTHRA's HR Symposium in Philadelphia on November 2, 2016. Marjorie Morrison (photo below), CEO and founder of PsychArmor Institute, will lead a session titled "Invisible Wounds of War at Work." The session is hosted by Mission Media, the industry's veteran hiring and retention initiative.

During the session, Morrison will outline some of the struggles veterans can face in employment settings. She will detail how substance use disorder, post-traumatic stress disorder, depression and traumatic brain injury can impact employees, and how employers can build and execute appropriate accommodation plans for employees in need of additional support. Attendees will leave this session with tools to more confidently address the impact of invisible wounds of war in the workplace for the success of both veteran and civilian employees.

In addition to Morrison's session, CTHRA's HR Symposium will feature an unrivaled forum for networking among more than 200 HR professionals, the Excellence in HR Awards Luncheon and these sessions:

- Leadership in Times of Change
- Inclusion in Next-Generation Workplaces
- Creating Passion Among Millennial Employees
- Super Secrets for Making HR Pertinent and Powerful
- Throwing Away the Rule Book on Performance Management
- Eyes Wide Open: Employment Law Update
